the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased in the UK, and the number of people with a mental health problem who are in contact with mental health services has also increased (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with a mental health problem. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of mental health services, the development of mental health care plans, and the development of mental health care teams. The aim of this paper is to describe the development of mental health care teams in the UK, and to discuss the implications of this development for the future of mental health care.

The development of mental health care teams in the UK has been a process of gradual change. In the 1950s, mental health care was provided by a small number of mental health professionals, including psychiatrists, psychologists, and nurses. The number of mental health professionals has increased significantly since then, and the range of services provided has also expanded.
